Struggle with a Maniac.

Three months.....

A story thrilling enough in its details to be woven into fiction has just come to us frash from Fair Point, Chautauqua Lake. On Saturday last a finely dressed and well appearing man landed atlFair Point, Chautauqua Lake, and engaged board for a fortnight at the Police

There was nothing unnatural in his appearance, nor did it seem at all remarkable when he attended church on Sunday morning and bowed in fervent prayer near the altar. People noting his conspicuous position, looked with admiring wonder upon the man, who, regardless of the scrutinizing vision of the whole congregation, manifested his religious zeal in the most emphatic manner.

On Monday morning the stranger strolled out near the lake and there met George Irwin, a somewhat noted duck hunter, who had just come in with his dog and gun. The finelydressed stranger affably greeted Mr. Irwin and asked to be allowed to examine his gun. Mr. Irwin unsuspectingly handed over the weapor, when the stranger carefully examined it, then cocked it, and holding it toward Mr. Irwin, asked him how he would rather die-would he prefer being drowned to being shot? Even then the man seemed perfectly natural.

Mr. Irwin, regarding the question as a joke, replied that if it was necessary for him to dia right there and then, he preferred taking a turn in the water. It was then that the stranger's eyes glared with maniacal freezy. He grap. pled with the now terrified Irwin.

The struggle was a desperate one. The mapiac was a powerful man, and with an iron grip dragged the sportsman to the water's edge, when the struggle for life and death be came even more desperate. Finally they both fell into the water, and while floundering there some men who slood at a short distance ran to the rescue and were scarcely able to release the victim from the maniac's clutch. His clothes were nearly all tera from his body, and he was terribly bruised by the brief but fearful encounter. Just about that time a small steamer came up to the dock. It required four strong men to put the wild maniae on board. He was taken to Mayville and ledged He persistently refused to the last to give bis consecration of the Sunday School ground at that place; that he had been chosen as the instrument of death. He seemed to talk sapely about the matter, and regarded Mr. Irwin as an unappreciative man, because, as he said, it was clearly in his power to shoot Irwin upon the spot, where is he had given him his choice of death, and ett, of the Union Square, writes sentimental poetry, and is very ambitious. She is unmarried. Miss Louisa Don, the leading actress of the Brooklyn Park, has been only a few years on the stage. She is the divorced wife of George W. Fox, a Troy photographer. Miss Minnie Palmer, of the Park, is a niece of Harry Palmer, the manager. She is a brunette in the street, wears a particularly long feather in her bonnet and looks demure. Mrs. Albaugh, who is playing in support of her husband at the Broadway, is a sister of Miss Margie Mitchell. They live on adjoining farms at Long Banch. A brother of these ladies died of yellow fever in Memphis last month. Miss Nina Varian, of the Union Square, is a daughter of Madam Varian Hoffman, the singer. She is unmarried. Misss Rose Eytinge is imperious in bearing, dresses expensively, and is said to have money. She rides in a coupe when shopping. She is the wife of George H. Butler, who is a nephew of Gen. Benjamin F. Butler. Miss Elly Coghlan, the "Anne Boleyn" at Booth's, is a sister of Charles and Rose Coghlan. She came from London very recently, and has had little experience as an actress. She and her eister walk in Broadway together often, elaborately dressed. She is unmarried. Mrs. Agnes Booth, of the Park, is credited with the best veice and method for reading blank verse of any acres in America; and she can manage a trail grace fully on the stage or elsewhere which is a rara accomplishment. Mrs. Florence is a sister of Mrs. Baraey Williams. She has been personating Mrs. General Gilflory almost continuously for four years, but never so well as now, owing, it is said, to a study during the past summer of vulgar American women in Paris. She is wealthy, if she gots her share of "The Mighty Dollar" dollars. Miss Maggie Mitchell is the wife of Mr. Paddock, formerly a Toledo merchant. She has plenty of money, and only acts because she likes to. Modjeska never walks in the street, but rides every day. It is said that she comes equarely by the title of ecuatess through her husbard, who accompanies her in her travels. A few years ago the couple went into stock farming in California, and lost their money in the venture; but their income now averages fairly. She sp ak : ordinarily with more of a foreign accept than when ac ing. Miss Stella Boniface, Wallack's first javeoile actress, is a daughter of George C. Bonifice, an actor of the old school .- N.
